Kids Around the World

Resource Type: Website

Kids Around the World, the National Peace Corps Association's website for elementary school-age kids, includes profiles of children in many developing countries. In their interviews, children talk about their lives, their homes, their families and what they do every day. The profiles also include pictures of the kids interviewed, and an extensive list of links to help you learn more about each country. This website is easy to navigate, fun to explore, and encourages children in the United States to ask questions and find out more about other parts of the world and the people who live there.

Kids Around the World offers many resources for teachers who wish to incorporate the website into their lessons. A lesson plan to accompany Kids Around the World is currently available on the website. Also available are activity sheets and lists of great children's books that are relevant to the countries and regions featured. Finally, the site includes links to other websites with general country information, maps, photos, news and current events, and information about children and youth. We invite you and your students to come and explore Kids Around the World at <http://www.katw.org> and discover more about the lives of children all over the world.
